Kind and Confident

Our value this week is confident

Dear Families,

We hope you all had a lovely bank holiday weekend. This week are thinking about self-confidence.

Confidence and positive self-image are about more than knowing that you're good at math or liking the way you look. They depend on being able to bounce back from setbacks and being willing to try new things and fail. Skills for coping with difficult things give children confidence they can handle what comes their way.

Children are bombarded with messaging —especially from social media — that undermines their confidence. And children with learning differences or mental health disorders often have lower self-esteem than their peers. But we can help by supporting kids' efforts and guiding them in acquiring skills that are the foundation for confidence. This is taken from The Child Mind Institute. Through our Value assemblies we will be teaching the children some foundation skills for self confidence.
Have a great week.
